The Value of Your Meeting Attendance

There comes a time when a member realizes that their 20 Group is very much a give-and-take proposition. These are not seminars. Members are not a part of an audience. Everyone has come to learn, and the price of taking information from fellow members is to give something back.

In a typical group, each member represents about five percent of the group. Admittedly, some members give more to the group than others do. In fact, it needs to be pointed out that serving as chairperson is not just an honorary matter. The chairperson really does give more and get less during the term of their chairmanship, but I am sure that everyone would like to think that they contribute at least their five percent to their 20 Group.

If you have a group of 20 members and four of them are absent from a meeting, the group will miss the input from 20 percent of its members. You have all seen composite questions go unanswered because of the absent member. Those who take the time off from their dealership only receive 80 percent of the value for their efforts. I believe that those members who have been in the group for a while, would agree that the meetings are much better with a larger group.

Here is another scenario: let's say we hold a meeting in a location that is difficult to get to. Two members from the same part of the country learn that the only returning flight leaves at 11 AM. Suppose one member chooses to stay over another day, while the other member elects to leave the meeting early to catch the flight on the last meeting day. The member who stays not only absorbs the extra lodging costs but is also cheated out of some meeting value because another member left early. It is important that we respect the time and efforts of our group peers.

When a group is starting out, the tendency is to be lenient with members about meeting attendance; however, as a group matures and strengthens, it is a combination of group discipline and mutual courtesy among its members that makes the relationship satisfying and profitable. Our best, most profitable 20 Groups will not tolerate attendance problems. The meetings are planned far enough in advance that, if given a high priority, a member can always plan around it and attend.

The seat you hold cannot be filled in your absence. If you will be there for the group, the group will make a major contribution towards the future success of your store.

Ten Steps Toward More Productive 20 Group Meetings

1. Recognize that the program belongs to you and its success rests largely with you.
2. Enter the discussion enthusiastically.
3. Give freely of your experience, but do not dominate the discussion.
4. Confine your discussion to the problem.
5. Say what you think.
6. Only one person should talk at a time. Avoid private conversations while someone else is speaking.
7. Listen alertly to the discussion.
8. Be patient with other members.
9. Appreciate the other person's point of view.
10. Be prompt and regular in attendance.

To Be Read

The statement in italics/bold print below should be read at the beginning of each meeting. A copy of this exhibit must be included with each meeting agenda distributed to individual Group members.

Free and open discussion Among group members is essential to the success of the individuals and made possible because no member competes with others in that group. There is no intent by NADA/ATD that the historical data, open discussion and agenda items will lead to areas prohibited by antitrust laws. Care should be taken to avoid any and all discussions with any member or members of 20 Group on matters prohibited by the antitrust laws. These areas include that:

- 1. There is no talk of expressed or implied agreements affecting the price(s) of goods or services.
- 2. There is no discussion of prices to be charged in the future.
- 3. There is no group pressure to compel adherence to price minimums or maximums.
- 4. The individual dealer data in a group is not disclosed to dealers or others who are not members of that group.

Other Information

- If you cannot attend the meeting, please advise NADA/ATD 20 Group and your Group Chairperson as soon as possible. All meeting expenses for the group, any planned social function where NADA/ATD 20 Group must give a guarantee to the hotel or other vendor, planned lunch breaks, NADA/ATD 20 Group consultant travel expense, meeting room equipment, and outside speakers will be prorated to all group members, present or not.
- Views and opinions of panelists or speakers are their own and do not necessarily represent those of NADA/ATD.
- Similarly, NADA/ATD 20 Group shall avoid taking positions that may give the impression that it represents the views of NADA/ATD.
- Members should retain a copy of each meeting agenda in their files for future IRS audit purposes. NADA/ATD 20 Group maintains only current-year and previous-year Group meeting agendas on file.

DISCLAIMER: The National Automobile Dealers Association has developed this information to inform its dealer members and others about conditions in the industry. The collection and any presentation of this information are not intended to encourage concerted action Among competitors or any action on the part of dealers, manufacturers or any third party that would in any manner fix or stabilize the price or any element of the price of any good or service, or exclude or limit any competitor or business from the marketplace. Any action taken in response to this information must be based on the individual business judgment of the recipient.
